BIOGRAPHY

According to Franck Scala, Primitive Arts, Symbolism, Minimalism, and 70's Design, are movements transcending time, which could either refer to a distant past or a utopian future. These movements, characterized by their appearing simplicity, reflect on complex and existential issues (our origins, life, death, spirituality), providing them with universal, timeless nature. Inspired by these subjects, Franck Scala seeks to create timeless artworks with universal symbolism. His works of organic or surrealist shapes draw on the observer's unconscious, introducing him to a world that already feels familiar.

During his teenage years, Franck Scala feels the need to express his overflowing emotions in paintings. Wishing to articulate them spontaneously, he chooses a free, intuitive practice, applying paint directly with his fingers to maximize sensations. The result, paintings close to Neo-Expressionism and/or Figuration Libre ("Free Figuration").

Years later, he discovers ceramic, and its plastic characteristics, also providing him a direct connexion with matter, as well as with the opportunity to give birth, with his hands, to works in volumes through modeling. Since then, he defines himself as a multidisciplinary artist, exploring different materials, trying to alter them manually, and avoiding as often as possible the use of tools to keep direct contact with matter.

In certain series, he aims to create a repetitive process, as a puzzle of patterns, shapes, and materials, whose meticulousness and recurrence carry him out of time, such as his work in mosaics.

These blends of patterns, shapes, and materials, although of an abstract appearance, are the outcome of a graphic illustration depicting, according to the artist, certain phenomenons, often natural, such as the impact of time and elements on matter.
